Why might subject pronouns often be omitted in Spanish sentences? Provide an example.

- Because they are not needed
- Because the verb conjugation indicates the subject ✓
- Because they are always used
- Because it is a rule in Spanish

Subject pronouns are often omitted in Spanish because the verb conjugation typically indicates the subject, making the pronoun unnecessary. For example, in the sentence 'Voy al mercado' (I go to the market), the subject pronoun 'yo' (I) is implied by the verb form 'voy.'

Translate the following sentence into Spanish using the correct subject pronoun: "They are my friends."

- Ellas son mis amigas
- Ellos son mis amigos ✓

The correct translation of "They are my friends" in Spanish is "Ellos son mis amigos." The subject pronoun "Ellos" is used for a group of friends that includes at least one male or is all male.

Describe a scenario where you would use "nosotras" instead of "nosotros."

- When referring to a group of males
- When referring to a mixed-gender group
- When referring to a group of females ✓
- When addressing someone formally

"Nosotras" is used when referring to a group of females, while "nosotros" is used for a mixed-gender or all-male group. For example, if a group of women is discussing their plans, they would say, "Nosotras vamos al cine" (We are going to the movies).

What is the correct pronoun for "they" when referring to a group of males?

- Ellas
- Ellos ✓
- Ustedes
- Vosotros

The correct pronoun for "they" when referring to a group of males is "they" itself, as it is gender-neutral and can refer to any group regardless of gender. In contexts specifically emphasizing a male group, one might also use "he" or "him" in singular references, but "they" remains appropriate for plural references.

Which pronoun would you use to address a group of female friends in Spain?
